would the police supply them?

The police said they did not supply the press and, when they did take pictures, they did not take the bodies as well. Mrs Henn: "A pity. No action was taken."

Parking may cause some not to visit – 1950

Local tradesmen are becoming worried about the parking situation in Cambridge.

They fear that, if this goes on, the people will not come shopping in the town, said a solicitor appearing for a motorist summoned for a parking offence.

Altogether there were 16 cases before the court and fines totalling £12 10s were imposed.

One motorist, whose car was punctured late one night, parked it in a side street off Mill Road and, knowing that the battery would last only two hours at the most, had not put his lights on. There was nothing else he could do. He was fined 10s.

Student escapes fire at college – 1937

An Emmanuel College undergraduate was trapped when fire broke out in his sitting room.

He climbed out of the window holding the automatic lifeline installed in the rooms but, as he was unacquainted with its working, he was unable to use it.

Porters fetched a ladder but, by this time, the lad, who had been standing on a three-inch ledge, had got on to a roof below his window.

The fire brigade threw him a rope and, returning to his room, he tied one end to a bedpost and lowered himself on it to escape.

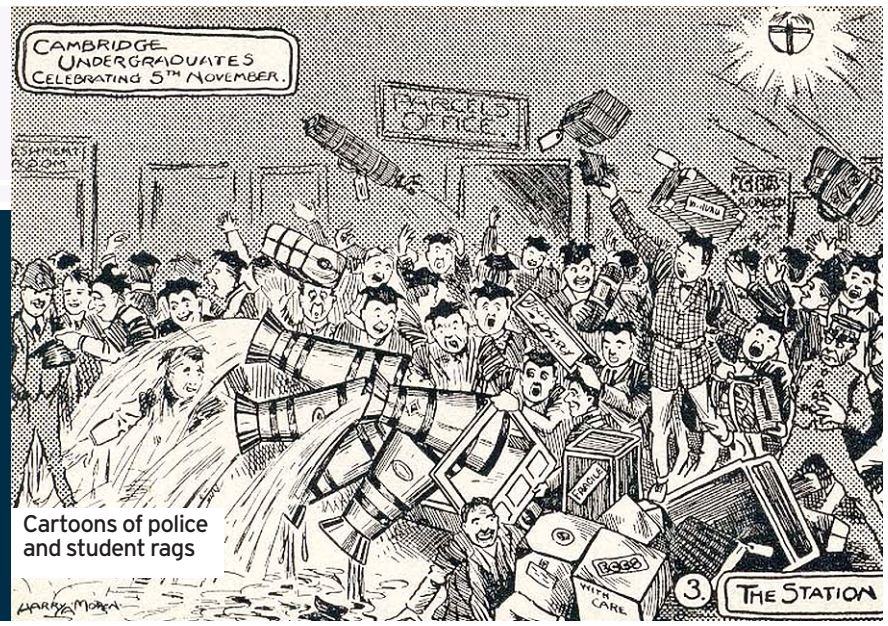

A large hole was burnt in the floor and furniture damaged.

Undergrads kill police almost weekly – 1907

"FOR an isolated policeman to be attacked and beaten to death by eight or ten students is an occurrence which happens almost once a week at Cambridge or Oxford", writes a correspondent in the 'Messagero' (Rome).

He adds that it is common for a group of about 50 undergraduates to wreck a shop as if a dynamite bomb had exploded in it when "the honest tradesman had refused them credit".

In the theatre, undergraduates do what they like, interrupt the actresses, start discussions with the actors on the stage, beat the orchestra, and upset the stalls, he alleges.

Hunting at Cambridge now at an end – 1909

Following a prosecution of an undergraduate for alleged cruelty to a deer when hunted by the university draghounds, the vice chancellor has ordered that the stags kept by the hunt are to be sent away from Cambridge.

In future, the hunting of deer or other animals kept in confinement renders members of the university amenable to the court of discipline.

The practice, therefore, so far as the university is concerned, is at an end.

Women at inebriates home need financial help – 1904

Hamond Lodge inebriates home at Terrington St Clements was opened in 1905 for inebriate women.

It is a fine manor house surrounded by large gardens and the change which has been wrought in many of the poor women who go there amply proves that the venture was fully justified.

There is a dark side too, for there are failures and sad ones. But we have a great anxiety. A great many patients come direct from the London police and their friends cannot guarantee the weekly charge.

The home is costly, there is dry rot in the floors and gardener's cottage, defective drainage, and an insufficient water supply. The result is a deficit that cannot be reduced without increased support.

WITH William HILL
VALID ON ENGLAND V FRANCE

Will England march on tonight at the World Cup? We've teamed up with William Hill to bring you a £2 free bet for their quarter-final clash with France.

The game kicks off at 7pm at Al Bayt Stadium. Gareth Southgate's side made it through to the quarters with a stylish 3-0 win over Senegal, in which Harry Kane moved to within one goal of Wayne Rooney's all-time scoring record for the Three Lions.

The impressive Jordan Henderson and Bukayo Saka grabbed the other goals. Defending champions France, meanwhile, brushed Poland aside 3-1, star striker Kylian Mbappe scoring two brilliant goals to go clear in the race for the Golden Boot (5). That came after Olivier Giroud scored his 52nd international goal to claim his country's outright record, surpassing Thierry Henry. Head to your nearest William Hill shop to stake your £2 free bet.
